

Alex Ardeshir Farahmand is an experienced mediator, business consultant, real estate investor, and licensed California real estate broker who helps individuals, families, and businesses resolve complex disputes through practical, thoughtful guidance.

Drawing on decades of experience in negotiation, real estate, business, public affairs, and dispute resolution, Alex brings a calm and solution-focused approach to challenging situations. His experience includes matters involving complex real estate transactions, financial irregularities, tax-related concerns, and competing business interests. This background enables him to organize detailed information, understand different perspectives, identify the issues that matter most, and help parties move toward practical solutions.

Alex has particular experience with real estate disputes, business and financial disagreements, family and family-business matters, trust and estate disputes, contract issues, personal injury claims, professional negligence, and other civil matters. He is skilled at explaining complicated financial and legal issues clearly, helping parties understand their options, and encouraging productive discussions.

Alex began his mediation practice in 1998 and completed formal negotiation and dispute-resolution training through the USC Gould School of Law Center for Dispute Resolution. He holds a J.D. and earned his bachelor's degree in History, with a minor in English Literature, from the University of Southern California. He also completed advanced graduate studies in Urban Planning and Public Policy at USC, with an emphasis on planning, real estate development, and related legal considerations.

His goal in every mediation is to reduce unnecessary conflict, clarify the issues, and help parties reach fair, practical, and durable agreements.
